TO SPRING. Now the wintry signs are going, Fast from stream and sod and tree, Warmer airs are mildly blowing. Spring is here with face of glee, Snows are low and suns are high Where her rosy footsteps fly; Wide abroad her mantle flinging, As the angel maid advances, Flowers are blooming, birds are singing, In the sunshine of her glances. Soul of virdure, youth and beauty,

Genius of the road of roses Who delays to pay the duty, Who but in thy lap reposes? Earliest born ! thy blush supernal Gave tints to Eden's flowers, Clad the globe with glorious vernal. Fitted scenes for heavenly hours. Changeless, though that globe is changing, Youthful, though our forms grow old.

Bringing beauty to the mould, Balm to breeze, light to skies, Life and freedom to the fountains. To the woodlondsemeral dyes, Moss and garlands to the mountains, Order to uncultured lands, Music to returning birds, Labor to the farmer's hands, Hope to hearts, and cheer to words;

As of yore thy feet come ranging,

Glorious, gentle, genial Spring, Could we ever to the sling, Never more a sigh for Summer Should a human bosom heave; She should be a noteless comer. Nor a look of love receive. For the ways are ways of grace;

Freshness, peace and purity; Paradise adorns thy face With its sweet simplicity; And though Summer's robes imposing Ampler seem and bolder dyed, Thine are evermore disc losing More of peace and less of pride.

Only in thy walks I'd wander, Other seasons sacrifice, And, when dust and spirit sunder, Leave thee only for the skies.
